The official press and media kit for
Andrew Snorton (author)

This is Author Andrew Snorton.

The New Jersey-raised and, Wake Forest University alumnus has a professional background in Corporate America (insurance claims) and is involved in his share of service programs like Bowl for Kids' Sake (with Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Metro Atlanta) and other related programs. However, he reaches for more. He transitions to teaching in Gwinnett County Public Schools at Pinckneyville Middle School and serves as an advisor for the after-school sports programs, the yearbook, and the Lyricists' Lounge Poetry Club (in addition to teaching language arts, social studies, and journalism). While making positive inroads, there's more in store.

He grows as a community presence, ranging from his board membership on Family Food Festival Atlanta, the LEAD Foundation, Inc., a member of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc, including the Alphas of Atlanta (which hosts its annual #AlphaDerbyWeekend™), along with different advisory boards including serving as a former president of the Association of Wake Forest University Black Alumni (2011-15), the university's Alumni Council (2011-16), Alumni-In-Admissions, the School of Divinity (2017-22), the Greek Alumni Advisory Board, and other related entities.

And then in 2017, he continues to expand his reach in equipping, educating, encouraging, and empowering others.

Deeper than your deepest sleep: thoughts on love with Joseph Snorton (the debut).

Released in 2017, if you or someone you know can identify with poetry based on the topic of love and its broader lenses, this is the book for you.

Based on conversation with a family member he didn't know existed until 2014, the book is a retelling of conversations between the author and his distant relative, Joseph. In looking at love through the relationships with your parent or guardian, siblings, extended family, community, civic organizations, people in your life, people who are no longer in your life, heartache, and self-reflection, the reader engages with a topic and an energy that is relatable and resonates with any audience. When readers consider their own personal struggles ranging from family, friends, career, or themselves, it puts things in perspective in that any can experience such an energy and emotion through multiple means. The 19-chapter poetic reality is one that is authentic and accessible; as we #gettoknowjoe, we ultimately get to know ourselves.

The second book. 9 stories of faith: volume 1.

Everyone is going through something. While people hear this, it may not always resonate when they consider their own personal struggles ranging from family, friends, career, or themselves. It can sometimes get to the point where they have little to no hope, faith, and feel they are “stuck” where they are. However, where you are is not where you’ll always be; when you get a point of reference to others’ life challenges, it can give people perspective, even a restoration of their hope and grounding. Nine people across the lenses of Christianity, Hinduism, and Islam are bold enough to share their stories, including the central questions centered on the following:

- What is your biggest daily struggle or challenge?
- What do you do to work through it?

With an array of stories ranging from physical health, mental health, life after incarceration, and other live challenges, ordinary people display extraordinary strength as they identify constructive ways through life’s challenges, conventional and otherwise, to live lives of meaning and purpose. These are their stories of faith.

The third book: get in the game that is nothing Minor.

The national pastime shared via the lens of the minor leagues. Covering 7 games in 8 weeks across the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, and Mississippi, it provides an intimate and engaging look at the grand old game at the A, AA, and AAA level. Complete with player interviews, game-coverage, photos, and a look at the Negro Southern League Museum (during the 100th anniversary of the league), fans of the game at all levels can find something to connect with.

From future stars to players already on the 40-man Major League Baseball roster, it's more than just capturing amazing gameplay. It's about sharing wisdom, insight, and passion for a game that people from all walks of life enjoy and share with those coming behind them.

It is more than just the game within the game; it goes beyond it in a way that is knowledgeable yet relatable.

And that is nothing Minor.

Innovative online series (two of them).

Through the weekly (each Wednesday at 1:06pm EST on Facebook Live for Author Andrew Snorton and Instagram Live for @authorasnorton) live chat series #TheFast15, the mid-day/midweek 15-minute chat provides opportunities for all to “come up for air”. During the now-normal, engagement through having time to simply check-up and check-in, enjoy a short reading from one of the books (and/or audiobooks), and closing out with an encouraging word provides a “safe space” for all to decompress and get renewed.

Likewise, the #allabouttheauthors series is a collaborative project with fellow author Fiyah Tyressa Ty. The Zoom-based series typically takes place every 2nd and 4th Sunday (now at 3pm EST), the hosts not only connect their audiences with featured fellow authors (2) to discuss their work, but a true partnership where they are able to do the same.
